Sign the Brain Tumor Community Letter to President-elect Biden

More so than any other president in U.S. history, President-elect Joe Biden and Dr. Jill Biden personally understand the devastating nature of brain tumors, having lost their son to a glioblastoma. President-elect Biden knows that we must make more progress towards better treatments and a cure for all of those impacted by brain tumors.

Please consider adding your name to this brain tumor community letter to President-elect Biden, letting him know that we're ready to work with his administration to improve the lives of brain tumor patients and caregivers.

Join us in letting President-elect Biden know that you stand ready to work together to find better treatments and a cure.

What has advocacy meant to you?

This year has been filled with many unexpected challenges that have affected our community in numerous ways. Despite those challenges, advocates like you continue to commit to sharing your stories, writing letters, attending meetings and insisting that your legislators prioritize the needs of the brain tumor community.

We want to know how your advocacy makes you feel. What inspires you to continue to value this work? What motivates and encourages you to participate? Can you share 3 words \(or less\) that symbolize or describe your advocacy in 2020?

Be a Catalyst for Change

It is a pivotal moment for our world, our nation, and our brain tumor community. National Brain Tumor Society rose to the challenge in 2020, making real, tangible progress in the face of unprecedented global crises and enabling patients and health care providers to adapt to medical and research challenges presented by the pandemic. That said, due to these crises we were not fully able to bring forward some of the most promising research initiatives that are ready to begin. With urgency and an unrelenting drive, we will not be satisfied until the fight to conquer and cure brain tumors is over. Together, we can ensure that 2021 is an even stronger year of breakthroughs, change, and hope.
